Drogheda has a rich and varied history that has been carefully compiled by author Ned McHugh, who has trawled hundreds of sources to generate histories of thousands of topographic sites in Drogheda. An essay with thematic maps fleshes out the topographical history into the development of the town. IHTA no. 29, Drogheda will be reproduced in large format with many historic and modern maps and illustrations in loose sheets to accompany the detailed text section.

Drogheda will bring this important Irish settlement into the Irish and European Historic Towns Atlas scheme where it can be compared with towns across Ireland and over 500 in Europe.

The Irish Historic Towns Atlas is a research project of the Royal Irish Academy. Visit www.ihta.ie for more information.

About the author:

Ned McHugh is a retired secondary school teacher with a long association with Drogheda. He completed a Masters in Local History and published Drogheda before the famine: urban poverty in the shadow of privilege 1826–45 (Dublin, 1998) as part of the Maynooth Local History Series. He has written articles on various aspects of eighteenth and nineteenth-century Drogheda.
